If you are as enthusiastic about gaming as we are, then you most likely grew up with the Super Nintendo. It was that legendary console that was released in the early 90s and you can't help but wonder if we would have had a generation of great video games and consoles without it. Whether you played Super Mario or Nintendo fighting games, you may feel that it's about time to take your Super Nintendo for a ride. In case that's the case, you are in the right place. In this article, we are going to focus on flashing the cartridge in the original Super Nintendo. Why Flashing? The purpose of flashing a Super Nintendo cartridge is to make it boot in the system. It doesn't matter if you find it in the trash or if you've recently purchased a new Super Nintendo. You might be thinking why the hell would you have to flash the cartridge. Because flash means ROM. ROM means ROM. ROM means ROM. When you flash the cartridge, you're essentially copying data from your cartridge to the main memory of the Super Nintendo. Since the Super Nintendo has a limited amount of main memory, you can basically fill up the space with all the content that you want. Once you've finished with the content on the cartridge, you're able to restore the content to the cartridge. You don't need to worry about storage space in the cartridge since you can wipe the cartridge by overwriting it. If your cartridge is brand new, we recommend that you start off with an unofficial copy of Super Nintendo Flash Program so that you can have a backup cartridge. This is probably the most straightforward way to flash Super Nintendo cartridges without risking any damage to the cartridge. If you have the "SFC" utility on your computer
